(none), adj. nullus, nemo (nullus of persons and things, nemo of persons only), non ullus, non quisquam (= not one, if a greater stress is to be laid upon the negative; the former as an adj., the latter as a pronoun), neuter (= neither, must always be used if we speak of two individuals or of two parties); if nullus and nemo are used in a partitive sense, that is, if — stands in opp. to the remaining parts or the whole, they govern the genit. (e.g. — mortal, nemo mortalium; — animal is more prudent, nulla beluarum prudentior est); the genit. may also sometimes be expressed by a circumloc. with de, ex (e.g. — man of our army was killed, nemo de nostris cecidit); sometimes it would appear that instead of nullus and nemo we use in Latin nihil (with genit. when it stands for nullus); however, nihil expresses the negative more strongly than nullus = none at all (e.g. there is — one(at all) more miserable than I am, and — one more happy than Catulus, nihil me infortunatius, nihil fortunatius est Catulo); to have — doubt(at all), nihil dubitationis habere); very often we use — when the negative does not refer to anything in general, but to something particular; in this case, which takes place principally when — belongs as an adj. to a noun or refers as a predicate to a noun previously mentioned, we use in Latin the negative non instead of nullus (e.g. you ordered them — ship, navem is non imperasti). We likewise use non in Latin for — when the object in English is expressed by a verbal noun (e.g. to have — fear, non timere; to feel — doubt, non dubitare; to feel — hatred against anyone, non odisse alqm., etc.); — one, nemo; at — place, nusquam; at — time, numquam (nunq.), nullo tempore; and at — time, nec unquam; in — respect, nihil; in — wise, nullo modo, nulla ratione. nobody, n. nemo, nullus (= no; as the genit. of nemo, nemini was little used, nullus was used instead, nemo homo; and —, nec ullus, nec quisquam; that —, ne quid; a —, terrae filius. nowhere, adv. nusquam.

that, I. demonstr. pron. ille, illa, illud, iste, ista, istud (ille, without being in opp. to hic, often used when we speak of something very well known, very celebrated, of any thing or person remote as regards time or place, but present in the mind of the speaker; iste = —, often when we speak of a third person or thing, with the idea of contempt or disapproval, — man there), alter (= the other of two; pl. alteri, if we speak of several on the other side); is, ea, id, hic, haec, hoc; those who, illi qui or (the relative clause preceding) qui, ii; — or, the word — not expressed, e.g. jacet corpus dormientis ut mortui (= as — of a dead man); — is my father, hic est meus pater; — only is true friendship, haec demum est amicitia firma; often by sic, e.g. — is his way, sic est ingenium ejus; = such a one, etc., is, ea, id; of — age, id aetatis; at — time, id temporis; we are at — age, id jam aetatis sumus. II. rel. pron. qui, quae, quo l; see

Who. III. conj. to connect the main clause; A, when the sentence with — contains the subject of the copula in the main sentence; 1, when the sentence with — conveys a general idea, render by the inf., e.g. officii est, etc., or by another noun, e.g. nihil suavius est quam amari or amor, = nothing is more pleasing than — one should be loved; 2, use the accus. and inf., after “it is pleasing, grievous, probable, clear, manifest, evident, true, it appears, it is useful, right, reasonable, necessary, lawful, it is allowed —”; after several of these impersonal verbs, use also quod and ut, see under C and D (e.g. it is pleasing to hear — you are well, gratum est te valere); 3, than —, as —, inf. with an adv. or another noun with an adj. or part., e.g. nula res tanto erat damna, etc., quam (a noun with an adj. or part.). B, when the sentence with — contains the object of the verb of the main clause, use acc. and infin.; 1, this is the case after all verbi sensum et affectum, to which belong also “to know, conceive, remind, expect, hope, fear, believe,” etc.; then also after fac, when it is = finge, faney —, etc., fac qui ego sum esse te; after the verbs “to hope, swear, promise, threaten,” we use the accus. and fut. infin., only after “to hope” we use the accus. and pres. infin. when we speak of anything referring to the present time, and the accus. and perf. infin. when we speak of anything past; 2, after the so-called verba declarandi, as “to say, tell, indicate, remember, convince, teach, prove (efficere),” etc.; 3, also after “to fix, determine, wish, forbid, impose, concede (that anything is so),” etc., the infin., if the sentence with — declares the object, whilst if it contains a wish or intention, we use ut; after “they,” “the people say,” “it is reported,” etc. (dicunt, tradunt, ferunt, produnt, perhibent), either by accus. and infin., or the nom. and indic. (of the passive voice), e.g. dicunt Romulum primum regem Romanum fuisse, or Romulus primus rex Romanorum fuisse dicebatur; dicunt vos ulfuisse, or vos dicebamini ulfuisse; after dubito, in the sense “I doubt not,” we find in Cic. always quin. C, when the sentence with — contains a description of anything or a circumst., 1, of the subject, when we can put “which” instead of “—,” by quod, as after “there is reason,” or “there is no reason,” (which, etc.), est (habeo), non est, nihil est quod (we may also use cur, as in English); also after “it is pleasing, rejoicing, I am glad, it is painful,” etc. (e.g. nihil est quod [i.e. illud quod] timeas); also after “we must add (eo or huc accedit),” where we use quod when we speak of a matter of fact, and ut when we refer to anything that is only in progress, always when the thing is only about to happen; 2, of the object when — = “because;” also by quod after “to be glad, rejoice (gaudere), to feel sorry, grieve (dolere), to wonder (mirari),” etc., where we use quod when we speak of a definite fact, but si, if we speak of something merely imaginary or as we suppose it; 3, when — stands for “inasmuch as, inasfar as.” D, always ut or qui (quae, quod) when the sentence with — expresses the purpose, condition, aim, effect, surmise, permission, encouragement, wish or command, as subject or object, or as additional clause; after is sum, non is sum, talis, qualis, is (such a one), ejusmodi, etc.; also qui, etc. (ut is, etc.), after tam, tantus, generally after negations, after quis? and after comparatives with quam, when these words express the degree, measure, up to which anything is said to possess a certain quality; and after nouns to express a purpose (e.g. Caesar sent messengers — they might say, Caesar nuntios misit qui dicerent); but ut is, etc., to express result; — not, after “to fear, to be afraid,” etc., ne non, seldom ut, and — alone.

ne; only — not, — by any means, ut ne (ne being placed before — which is prevented), e.g. ut hoc ne facerem (= he took care —, etc.); I say — . . . not, etc., by nego with accus. and infin., e.g. he asserts — there are no gods, deos esse negat. I. — in exclamations, I. when we express a wish, oh — ut! utinam! o si (see OH); God grant —, etc., facit Deus, ut, etc.; — not! utinam ne! 2. in general exclamations, by accus. and infin. with, prep. (A) = in union, 1, cum, una cum; often simply rendered by the ablat. with an adj. (e.g. omnibus copiis egredi); 2, in friendly intercourse, cum; after verbs compounded with cum, either cum with ablat. or simply the dat. (e.g. what have I to do — you? quid tibi mecum est rei?), after words expressing similarity or equality, the simple dat. (but after similis and its compounds, also the genit.); when two things are represented as being equal to one another, by idem (= the same, etc.), the prep. "—" is rendered by qui or a copulative conj., seldom by cum with ablat. (only in poets simply by the dat.; a Graecism); 3, = in participation, in confederacy with, cum (e.g. cum algo bellum gerere adversus alqm); = by means of, per with accus. alcjs operā, alcjs ope, auxilio, algo auctore; also sometimes by the simple ablat. (e.g. Caesar eā legione, quam secum habebat, murum perduxit in altitudinem, etc.); 4, in a hostile sense, cum, contra, adversus with accus. (the two latter used when cum might be misunderstood, as it might also mean "in union —," etc.), e.g. bellum gerere cum algo or contra (adversus) alqm; (B) = in company and accompanied by, 1, of persons, cum (= along —); but if only expressing that one particular action refers to more than one person, it is generally rendered in Latin simply by a copulative conjunction (et, ac, atque), (e.g. the women — their children were killed, mulieres atque infantes occisi sunt); 2, of things, cum; it is often rendered in this sense (armed, furnished —, etc.) more clearly by participles or adjs. or by a relative clause (e.g. armed — a dagger, cum sicā, or sicā instructus); at the same time as some phenomenon that takes place in the course of time, cum, or (but less expressive) by the simple ablat. (e.g. — daybreak, (cum) primā luce), hence also of effects and consequences that are simultaneous and immediate or direct; = not without, cum, non sine (e.g. to hear, etc. — pleasure, cum voluptate; — the help of the gods, (cum) dis adiurantibus); in many instances by particular expressions (e.g. — care, diligenter), or by construction with a partic. (e.g. — quickness, adhibiti celeritate; — that, inde, deinde, ad haec; — all your diligence, pro or ex tuā diligentia; — all men truth is to be held in honour, apud omnes veritas colenda est.).

"Quite the best Dictionary of its size that has been issued."—Globe.

"The best at the price in the market."—London Quarterly Review.

"The best French and English Dictionary of an ordinary size in existence."—Critical Review, Paris.

"The original dictionary was a good one ; the revised edition is a distinct improvement, and will be welcomed by a large number of persons who are in need of a trustworthy dictionary neither too high in price nor too unwieldy in size."—St. James's Gazette.

Cassell's French Dictionary. (FRENCH-ENGLISH and ENGLISH-FRENCH.) 711th Thousand. Revised. 1,150 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d. ; half-morocco, 5s.

"CASSELL'S FRENCH DICTIONARY has become a standard work in this country, being used in the best schools, recommended by many of the first professors of the day, and generally found a reference book of the highest value and importance."—Daily Chronicle.

Cassell's German Dictionary. (GERMAN-ENGLISH and ENGLISH-GERMAN.) 317th Thousand. 1,120 pp. Cheap Edition. Cloth, 3s. 6d. ; half-morocco, 5s.

"To say this is the best of the smaller German Dictionaries in the field is faint praise, and were it not for the special merits of one or two, we might, without exaggeration, say that Miss Weir is first, and the rest nowhere."—Journal of Education.

Cassell's Educational Catalogue will be forwarded post free on application.
